FIJI VOLUNTEERS HAVE A NEW THRONE

Frontier-Fiji expect living conditions on camp to be basic, but we never thought that they'd go as far as they did to create a little bit of luxury away from home! Last week, the group undertook the monumental task of recovering a giant concrete toilet "throne" from the ocean's floor. This recovery operation put the team's diving skills (and muscles) to the test as they lugged the giant to the surface and then dragged it to the camp, where it will replace the old long-drop style toilet. Everyone on camp assures us that it was well worth the effort!

EXPLORING THE UNKNOWN ON SAT-CAMP IN MADAGASCAR

This phase, Frontier-Madagascar marine volunteers were put to the test as they undertook an eight-day satellite camp to a previously unexplored area of Diego Bay. Everyone enjoyed this incredible opportunity to discover new forms of marine life and explore uncharted underwater caves and coral reefs. At the end of the satellite camp the volunteers returned to camp exhausted and filthy but incredibly happy. Afterwards, they were rewarded with a "cowboys and Indians"-themed party night that continued long into the night.

A FAIRYTALE ENCOUNTER WITH NICARAGUAN SCHOOLCHILDREN

Our Nicaragua volunteers all agree that the best part of their expedition so far was the trip that they took to a local school, where they helped schoolchildren design props and costumes for a fairytale production, which the students later performed for the Frontier-Nicaragua team. As Claire Baldwin said, "Most of us came here to work with turtles or monkeys and never expected working with these kids to be so much fun! One of the students that I worked with gave me a bracelet at the end of the day. I'll keep it forever!"
