

11 bird species face extinction

About 11 species of the 27 endemic bird species in our country are feared of becoming extinct in the near future if we fail to protect them now.

Bird Life International conservation manager Vilikesa Masibalavu said logging disturbs the habitat of birds.

"Birds are territorial and logging chases the birds away to find other new areas to live in," said Mr Masibalavu. He said agricultural developments disturb the very area the birds live in and fire destroys everything that the bird should live on in the forests.

"Invasive species also endanger the birds' lives like the mongoose and rats.

"They live off some of these birds," Mr Masibalavu said.

There are altogether 59 bird species in Fiji, he said, and out of that 27 are endemic and can not be found in other places in the world.

6 - FIJI SUN, FRIDAY - JUNE 1, 2007

11 bird species face extinction

About 11 species of the 27 endemic bird species in our country are feared of becoming extinct in the near future if we fail to protect them now.

Bird Life International conservation manager Vilikesa Masibalavu said logging disturbs the habitat of birds.

"Birds are territorial and logging chases the birds away to find other new areas to live in," said Mr Masibalavu. He said agricultural developments disturb the very area the birds live in and fire destroys everything that the bird should live on in the forests.

"Invasive species also endanger the birds' lives like the mongoose and rats.

"They live off some of these birds," Mr Masibalavu said.

There are altogether 59 bird species in Fiji, he said, and out of that 27 are endemic and can not be found in other places in the world.